How is this presentation different from one you might have to do for a class?

How do these differences guide your research process and methods?

How will the sources used differ?

What kinds of sources are you looking for here? Where will you find them? Where will you find sources that you don’t agree with?

What scale of governance are you looking for? (Circle any that apply)
- Global
- International (ex: comparing 2 or 3 countries)
- Country
- State
- County
- City/town

If you were to make your topic into a case study - which countries (or other geographic units)?

What organizations working at these scales intersect or engage with your topic? (circle those that apply and brainstorm a few specific ones working on your topic)
- Government
- Non-governmental organizations
- Intergovernmental organizations
- Non-profit organizations
- Foundations
- Think tanks
- Academic centers

In thinking about these organizations doing work on your topic, imagine your ideal interview candidate (an important “primary” source for this Institute). Write down in a few bullet points any elements of their job description that will help you identify this person.

What are some possible policy positions you want to advocate for? Be concise, write it as a tweet!

Then… try to think of an opposing position and write that as a tweet.
